John Church & Co.
(1872)

Jairus Maxson Stillman (1834-1917) was born in Alfred, New York. His father was a singer, directed the choir of their church, and taught singing schools in the area. He went to the singing schools with his father and attended singing classes at Alfred Academy. At age 20, he became leader of the church choir, began teaching in the singing schools, and studied music at Alfred University. He moved to North Reading, Massachusetts and studied under Lowell Mason at the Normal Music Institute. He also studied at the Normal Institute at Genesee, New York, and the Normal Music Institute at South Bend, Indiana. He was a pupil of Dudley Buck. He taught singing schools in Shelby and Logan counties, Ohio; led the Lutheran church choir in Bellefontaine, OH, and the Seventh Day Baptist church choir in Jackson Center, OH. He was professor of music at Hopkinton Academy, Rhode Island, became head of the music department at Alfred University. He finished his career as professor of music at Milton College, Wisconsin. He conducted many music conventions and institutes throughout the upper Mid-west, his work extending to thirteen states: Rhode Island, Connecticut, Vermont, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Ohio, Illinois, Wisconsin, Iowa, Minnesota, and South Dakota. He authored many singing school text books. His compositions include works for singing schools, hymns and anthems.

Ye sing to us of springtime,
With buds of opening flowers,
When golden sunbeams scatter
The clouds of winter band;
Of buds and shining brooklets,
Of May queens sweet and fair,
But here's a song for winter
With beauties rich and rare.

*O, we'll sing to the good old Frost King,
To the stars that brighter shine,
To the snows and the jingling sleigh-bells,
To the merry winter time.*

Ye sing to us as summer,
With hours of golden maze,
When hum the drowsy insects
And tasseled harvest's wave,
When azure skies bend lightly,
And pale the moonbeams fall;
But the icy gems of winter
Are lovelier than them all.

The cheeks of youth grow brighter
When touched by winter's hand;
The aged round the fireside
Recall the household band;
Each home grows hearer, nearer,
The wanderer returns;
While winter kindles starlight,
Within true love-light burns.
