Translation

You are completely beautiful, my love, and there is no flaw in you. A honeycomb drips from your lips; honey and milk are under your tongue; the scent of your ointments is above all spices. For now the winter is past, the rain is over and gone: the flowers have appeared, the blossoming vines emit their fragrance, and the voice of the turtle dove is heard in our land. Arise, hasten, my love, come from Lebanon; come, you shall be crowned.

(Compiled from the Song of Solomon, Ch. 4, vv.7, 11a, 10b; Ch.2, vv.11, 12, 13b, Ch.4, 8a.)

Liturgical Function

Tota pulchra es was a psalm antiphon at First Vespers on the feast of the Assumption of the Virgin (15 August) that was sometimes sung at votive memorials in the later Middle Ages. White's setting cannot be dated, but may perhaps be a youthful work written for performance at memorials during the reign of Queen Mary.

Editorial Conventions

The nomenclature of the voice-parts follows the Tudor convention.

The original clef, mensuration symbol and first note of each part are shown on the prefatory staves.

Editorial accidentals are placed above the notes concerned and remain operative throughout the bar.

Ligatures are denoted by the sign [ ] .

Spelling of the text has been modernised.

Text repetition signs in the underlay have been expanded editorially in italics.

Underlay between square brackets is entirely editorial.

Notes on the Readings of the Sources

Given that White's setting is a Marian antiphon, the date in B is unlikely to be that of composition. 1573 would make most sense as a date of copying, but the paper used in B is thought to date from no earlier than 1575. Perhaps the scribe copied the date from his archetype, though there seems no good reason why he should have done so.

Neither source underlays the text very precisely with the result that there is much ambiguity, especially regarding whether melismas fall on penultimate or final syllables. The difficulties of interpretation are compounded by the fact that White's underlay was often inelegant. Consequently, ungracious text repetitions may not always be attributable to scribal interference. In other respects the two sources agree reasonably well and it seems that both are not too far removed from a common archetype. Both lack underlay in bars 70–72 and both have the same misplaced underlay in bar 82 (although their treatment of bar 83 differs).

In the notes below, each reference to a bar or group of bars is separated by an oblique stroke. Within these references multiple readings in the same voice are separated by commas and readings in different voices by semicolons. The order within each entry is: 1) bar number; 2) voice; 3) reading of the source. For extended references subsequent bar numbers are in brackets. Pitches are in capital letters, preceded by a number where necessary, e.g. <sup>1</sup>C = first note C in the bar. The sign + denotes a tie and  $\gtrless$  an underlay repeat sign.

The printed Sarum antiphonal of 1520 flattens the Bs in both bar 88 and, by implication, bar 90. Other antiphonals and processions show different treatments of these two Bs. Some flatten both Bs, some have no flats for either and yet others flatten only the second B. This last option is the one that best suits White's polyphony.
